PRESENTS

Angela Mancuso,

Former President of Universal Cable Studios

Our culture is front of our eyes, on television, in movies, in songs streaming on our phones. But it's created by people with vision, with determination and with dedication. The infantry are the artists and designers and writers. The ones who pull all those artists, designers and writers together are called producers. And their specialties and skills are not as apparent, but their products are products of cultural and creative collaboration. Angela Mancuso, is one of those Producers.

All of her work directly involves the skills, talents and intelligence of writers, designers and artists, as well as business people, and marketing people. But Angela does so with an eye toward diversity and fairness. Her upcoming series for HBO, Who Fears Death (based on the novel by Nnedi Okorafor) with partners Michael Lombardo and George RR Martin, Welcome to the Monkey House –short stories of Kurt Vonnegut at Amazon, and the HBO Film The Battle of Versailles, with director Ava Duvernay attest to her dedication to breaking down barriers and working with diverse and talented artists.
