Call for Proposals
Fall 2013 Third Annual Emerging Scholars Conference
October 19, 2013

Theme:
(Re)examining Social Justice

As a broad term, social justice encompasses a sense of processes and objectives that strive toward a just society for all. This raises the need to critically examine the understanding of social justice and its implications for policy, research, and practice. What does it mean to be a socially justice educator or researcher? What is the role of the social justice advocate? What will enable social justice to maintain its longevity rather than being merely a buzz term?

For the third annual conference, the College of Educational Studies invites all emerging scholars to submit proposals on any topic related to social justice. At the conference, emerging scholars have the opportunity to their work, participate in a roundtable discussion, or submit a poster.

Submissions:
Proposals must be submitted as Word doc (or docx) attachments (New Times Roman, 12 pt. font) via email. Email proposals to Dr. Susan Gabel (gabel@chapman.edu) no later than September 15, 2013.

Proposals should be submitted with the cover sheet below.

For finished studies, the proposal should be one-page single-spaced along with a 150-words abstract that is single-spaced. The one page proposal should clearly indicate the title, the relevance of the work, description of methods, and conclusions and implications.

For studies in progress, the proposal should be 150-words abstract that clearly states the purpose of the study, description of methods, and potential conclusions and implications in a single-spaced format.

Deadline:
Proposals must be submitted by 5 p.m. on August 30, 2013. For proposals that have been accepted, the individual(s) will be notified on September 30, 2013. Further details in regarding to the panel, roundtable, or poster will be provided at that time.
