Survivor Testimony: Rudolph Yerahmiel Lobel

Through Rudolph Yerahmiel Lobel’s eyes, each simple event becomes a horror-filled experience. Yerahmiel remembers moments of long ago as if they occurred yesterday. One such moment is when he stepped out of the train into an unknown place. The hand portrays his feeling of fear about the future, a future pulling him into a dark abyss. The train tracks illustrate that no matter which train he boarded, he would feel lost. The tracks lead both into and out of the abyss. The tracks merge memory and meaning.
